The Beginning of Film Making

A lot has changed since the beginning of film making. In the days of silent movies it wasn't necessary for actors to have trained _____; their _____ and movements were far more important. In those days written explanations were shown in between the _____ to make it easier for the _____ to understand what was going on. Often the _____ of a cinema would employ a pianist who had to _____ the film.

When finally _____ was added to the films, many silent movie stars lost their _____ completely because their voices didn't please the public. Years later another _____ made movies even more attractive than before: the development of colour film.

The Story of the London Underground

The London Underground is one of the largest and busiest city railway systems in the world. For 140 years it has been transporting people around the capital. Today 2.8 million journeys are made on the Underground every day. It runs for nineteen hours, closing only for a few hours for cleaning each night.

The Tube has an interesting history. As it was difficult to lay railway tracks through built-up areas of the nation's capital, it was decided to construct an underground system. Work started in February 1860, and the first city underground train in the world opened on January 9, 1863. There were different fares for first, second and third class. Trains ran every day, there was only a two-hour 'church break' on Sundays. The first Tube was driven by steam, but in 1890 the underground system was electrified. Eventually the different classes of travel were abolished.

In the Second World War the Underground took on an important new function. During the air raids thousands of Londoners sought shelter on the platforms. People slept packed closely together and cheered themselves up playing games and singing songs. Although the Tube was the safest place for Londoners, it could not protect everyone, and there were several incidents when bombs hit the Underground and killed people.

My Style

Drama graduate Nicole, 24, hates shopping and buys all her clothes in four or five shopping trips each year. She likes a casual style, and her wardrobe is cleared out and replaced every couple of years. Well-loved items are worn to death then thrown out while the rest is given to charity shops.

She said: "My wardrobe isn't worth a lot because I don't really spend a lot, and as I often clear it out I don't accumulate. The oldest thing I own is a brown cotton vest top my mum wore in the '60s. I love it because it reminds me of her. Apart from a few dresses most of my clothes are very practical, for example trousers and tops I can wear to work or out with friends."

Favourite labels include French Connection, Mango and Oasis. Nicole keeps her clothes on a single rail and in a drawer unit in the walk-in wardrobe she shares with her husband. The majority of her clothes are in dark but warm colours, reflecting Nicole's love of autumnal shades.

She said: "I wear black and white a lot for work. My favourite colours are greens, plums and dark reds, although I don't consciously look for them when I go shopping. I have such a mixture of clothes in my wardrobe probably because I'm quite indecisive."
